

Transcript for Strip

279 — Love is Worth Everything

This comic is a single panel. The figures of Nickey and Sheila are covered by a silken sheet of warm pink, their outlines seen clearly. Above the edge of the sheet, two bare arms extend downward, their hands clasping each other and, between them, the stem of a rose, its flower pointing down to the foot of the bed. A few rose petals are scattered across the bed.

At the bottom of the picture is a quotation: “For one human being to love another; that is perhaps the most difficult of all our tasks... the work for which all other work is just preparation.” — Rainer Maria Rilke

