

Transcript for Strip

011 — Splitting the Pair

Panel 1: At the table in the small dining room, Ophelia, Lightfoot, and Caedmon are continuing their conversation. The lady skunk sighs, “I guess what really bothers me is the divorce cases.” The fox agrees, “It’s sad to see love end.”

Panel 2: The badger observes, “With more than half of marriages in this country ending in divorce, it makes you wonder if love was ever there in the first place.” Sheila admits, “You have a point.”

Panel 3: Alone in the panel, her arms raised in fists to imitate fighting, Ophelia continues her thought. “I guess I only get to see them at their worst, but these people act like wild beasts, going at each other tooth and nail, screaming, fighting, tearing each other apart.”

Panel 4: We see all three again, with the lady skunk observing, “You’d have better luck pairing up a rabbit with a wolf.” The fox asks, “Has that ever been done?” The badger says, “It’d never last.”

This strip is an homage to the strip Kevin and Kell, by Bill Holbrook, whose main characters are a married couple... a rabbit and a wolf. Visit them at www.kevinandkell.com, with my compliments.

