

Transcript for Strip

003 — Threatening Caedmon

Panel 1: The panel focuses on Caedmon McKenna, a male badger, sitting in a plush, comfortable chair, reading a book, a goose-neck lamp casting light over his shoulder. He's dressed casually in a light-blue button-down shirt and blue jeans. His hindpaws are bare. Above him, the narration bar reads: Within the confines of this house, its inhabitants appear in their natural forms as anthropomorphic animals. Without looking up from his book, the badger says, "We prefer 'furry'; it kinda cuts to the chase."

Panel 2: The badger continues to read his book, as the narration bar above him reads: This is Caedmon who, as you can see, is a badger. As a rule, badgers are known for their short tempers and ferocious physical attacks.

Panel 3: Caedmon continues reading, heedless of the commentary, and the narration bar reads: Usually spoiling for a fight and easily excitable, badgers will attack anything that threatens their home, their mates, or their safety.

Panel 4: The narration bar reads: ahem* I said they will attack anything...* Caedmon calmly turns a page in his book and says, "Yeah, yeah. Come back when you can actually threaten me with something other than long-winded monologues."

