295 — Discretion

Panel 1: Theo (white tiger) and Cora (human) have gone to Theo's room for a bit of privacy. He sits in his computer chair, facing her as she sits on the bed. Late evening sun comes in through the window. The tiger says, "I get the feeling that you really want to talk about this." Cora admits, "Theo, if you weren't a tiger, we probably would have made love already."

Panel 2: Leaning toward her, Theo declares, "For what it's worth, I consider every moment I spend with you to be making love." She chuckles softly, asking, "Are you avoiding the subject by being romantic?"

Panel 3: The tiger shrugs, explaining, "I don't mean to. I guess I'm a little concerned." "About me?" Cora wonders. "About you?"

Panel 4: Seeming resigned, Theo admits, "About our PG rating." Cora leans toward him, smiling as she assures him, "I'm sure the cartoonist will be discreet."

Those who know me may be wondering just how discreet I can be. I'm known to have very little filter, on occasion, and "everyone knows furry is nothing but smut." After nearly 300 comics, I hope I've managed to put the kibosh on that nonsense. You could read a sample chapter of my recent novel The Last Defender of Albion as another example.
