294 — Barbed Conversation

Panel 1: Theo (white tiger) is lying on the sofa in the living room of the house, with his girlfriend Cora (who, though “furry” at heart, is still in her human form). She lays against him in a sweet cuddle while they watch television. Taking up the earlier thread, Theo asks, “What else are you learning from these nature programs you’ve been watching?” “Oh, lots of things,” she tells him. “They get very specific about the physical attributes of male cats.”

Panel 2: Seeming a little uncomfortable, Theo says, “Somehow, I’m not sure I want to know.” “It’s really interesting,” Cora insists. “I’m sure it is,” Theo allows, clearly hoping the conversation is closed.

Panel 3: They lay together on the sofa, continuing to watch television, content with each other.

Panel 4: She adds, “Something about barbs...” His eyes clenched tightly, Theo says, “That would be a NO.”

There are aspects of being an anthropomorphic tiger that don’t always translate from the animal form (various bits of Rule 34 notwithstanding). The question now: Is Cora relieved or disappointed? Perhaps we’ll find out...?
