

Transcript for Strip

035 — Library Still Life

Panel 1: Lightfoot, in his human form, is letting himself into the library where he works. Instead of his usual vest, he's wearing a blue-gray button-down shirt. A narration bar at the top of the panel reads, In the gray dawn of morning, the cleverly disguised fox lets himself into another of his sanctuaries: The public library.

Panel 2: Now inside the library, we see Lightfoot in his red fox form. The narration bar above him reads, Coming to work ahead of everyone else, Lightfoot is free to be himself for the first few hours of his day. Turning on the lights, the fox calls out, "Haáhe, everyone! Wake to another day."

Panel 3: Walking further into the library, Lightfoot makes his way along a wall of framed pictures. The narration bar reads, Who are you talking to? There's no one here... The fox replies, "There's always someone in a library, no matter the time of day."

Panel 4: Lightfoot stands next to a framed picture of Kurt Vonnegut. The narration bar reads, We apologize for the behavior of the crazy fox. Lightfoot shrugs and says, "Suit yourself." The poster of Kurt Vonnegut says, "So it goes."

