

Transcript for Strip

017 — Tail Call

- Panel 1: Sheila (our resident kangaroo) is standing in the doorway of the bedroom belonging to Theo (the white tiger). “What’s doin’, Tiger?” she asks. Sitting at his computer desk, Theo answers, “Hey, Shee. Just checking on my email.”
- Panel 2: Sheila, moving closer to Theo’s desk, says, “I should check on mine. It’s been a few days.” Theo turns toward her, asking, “Actually, I was going to ask you if you’d noticed anything unusual about your internet connection lately. I think the house may be having some influence on the signal.”
- Panel 3: Sheila frowns in thought. “What do you mean by influence?” she asks. “Well,” Theo explains, “We know it’s altered us into furries, and we know it keeps us safe and cozy. So I’m just wondering...”
- Panel 4: From Theo’s computer, a voice declares, “You’ve got tail!” Sheila’s ears go straight up as she exclaims, “Stone the crows!” Theo replies, “Only if they start spamming me.”

Side note: “Stone the crows” is a British/Cockney expression of surprise. “I won the betting pool? Well, stone the crows!”

